

Submission

To whom it may concern,

It appears to me that a lot of policies aimed at rescuing the economy are focussed on those who have limited incomes who for the most part need to go in to debt in relation to the grant. For eg, the new homeowners grant. These stimuli completely miss an opportunity to encourage those who have money/savings to spend but could use some incentive to bring that spending forward on jobs say over 10k. I believe the government should look at people with higher incomes and policies/initiatives to encourage them to spend. They are probably (like me) holding on to income in these uncertain times. Grants should be available up to 20k on a 1 to 4 or 5 dollar spend on a range of things. Buying a new car/renovations etc. It is people like me who pay their taxes and higher taxes but seem to get missed whenever money is being doled out. Help us to help the nation.